of his Countrymen. These inimitable Productions of his Pencil might alone have established his Fame. They present most interesting and affecting Scenes, in which he has displayed all the Powers of his Art, by Character, Composition, Design and Effect; and in which even his Colouring partakes of the poetical Spirit of the Painter: not too gay or seductive in the Scenes of Dissipation, and keeping sober Pace with the melancholy Tone of those, which conclude this admirably treated Subject.

We speak with Confidence of the Merit of these Paintings; and our Congratulations are ready, to greet the Amateur of Taste and Feeling, who may distinguish himself by securing so enviable a Purchase.
